The Nobel Prize is the most prestigious international award in the fields of physics, chemistry, medicine, literature, and peace. The prize is named after a great man called Alfred Nobel. He had made a will just before his death , which said that all his money and possessions should be put in a Trust. Yearly awards are given from this Trust to persons who work in the interest of humanity. It was a moment of great pride for India when in 1930, the Nobel prize for physics was awarded to C.V. Raman , for his work on the ' scattering of light '. C.V Raman was the first Indian scientist to be given the Nobel Prize. The whole country rejoiced at this happy news. C.V Raman himself was overjoyed . People from other countries finally recognized the brilliance and intelligence of Indian scientists. But for C.V Raman it was not the end of the journey . He had much more work to do . All along he was very confident that Nobel Prize would come to him. Believe it or not, he had booked sea passage to Stockholm , two months before the announcement of the award. C.V. Raman was a very witty person. He always took pride in saying that he was a professional physicist as well as a professional humorist. When C.V Raman went to Stockholm to receive the Nobel Prize , on his way back he stopped in France. He was invited for a party. Wine flowed like water. When the host discovered that C.V Raman was not drinking , he said, " Respected Sir, why don't' you taste our wine ? " C.V Raman did not drink. So, with bubbling humor, Raman explained . " Ah ! You want to celebrate the Raman effect by finding out the wine effect on Raman ! "
